-let, suffix, appended to sbs. The oldest words in Eng. with this ending are adoptions of OF. words formed by adding the dim. suffix -et, -ete (see -ET) to sbs. in -el (repr. the L. dim. suffix -ellum, -ellam, or the L. ending -ale of neut. adjs.; see -AL). Examples are bracelet, chaplet, crosslet, frontlet, hamlet, etc. Of these only crosslet suggests by its form and sense a dim. of an Eng. word. Possibly Fr. dims. were directly imitated by some Eng. writers.

An early dim. in -let is armlet (sense 2, 'little arm of the sea', recorded 1538); others are townlet (a 1552), ringlet (Shaks.), kinglet (Florio, after F. roitelet). But the formation did not become common until the 18th c.

In a few words (anklet, armlet, necklet, etc.) the suffix is appended to sbs. denoting parts of the body, forming names for articles of ornament or attire. The oldest word of this type, armlet, was perh. suggested by a false analysis of frontlet; in the later words the analogy of bracelet has prob. been chiefly operative.

-ling (liŋ), suffix[1], forming sbs. A Com. Teut. formative, arising from the addition of -iŋgo-z -ING[3] to noun-stems formed with -ilo- (-EL[1], -LE 1).

1. In OE., and subseq. in ME. and mod.E., -ling added to sbs. forms sbs. with sense 'a person or thing belonging to or connected with (the primary sb.)', as hȳrling hireling, etc. The derivs. from adjs. have the sense 'a person or thing that has the quality denoted by the adj.', e. g. dēorling darling, etc.; so from an adv., underling subordinate. The personal designations in -ling are now always contemptuous or unfavourable, as courtling, earthling, worldling, etc. A few words, e. g. shaveling, starveling, strip-ling, formed on vb.-stems, follow the analogy of nursling, where the first element is ambiguous. In these uses the suffix is no longer productive.

2. In ON. the suffix had a diminutive force. In Eng. this use appears first in codling (c 1314), gosling (15th c.), duckling, etc. Hence many new dim. formations, chiefly contemptuous personal designations, as lordling, etc. In this use the suffix is still a living formative.

-ling[2], -lin(g)s suffix, forming advs., now mostly dial. The Teut. root liŋg-, laŋg-, luŋg- to extend, appears in OE. (with or without advb. -s) added to sbs. forming advs. of direction or extent, as on bæcling backwards, nihtlanges for a night, grundlunga, -linga to the ground. ME. formations are grufelyng GROVELLING, headling(s, noseling, sideling(s; formations from adjs. denoting condition or position are more numerous later, as darkling(s, flatlingl(s, hidlings. (Cf. MLG. sunderlingen, -es, Du. zondering adj., EFris. sirlings sidelong, WFris. sidjlongs.)

LXX. 1662. The Roman numeral symbol for Seventy; hence, abbrev. for SEPTUAGINT.

-ly, suffix [1], appended to sbs. to form adjs., represents OE. -līc :—OTeut. -līko-, from the sb. līkom* appearance, form, body (see LICH). The primitive force of the suffix is therefore 'having the appearance or form indicated by the first element of the word'.

The most general senses of the suffix are 'having the qualities appropriate to', 'characteristic of', 'befitting'; e.g. beastly, beggarly, cowardly, kingly, scholarly, soldierly. Another use is to form adjs. denoting periodic recurrence, as daily, hourly, yearly, etc.

-ly, suffix [2], forming advs., represents OE. -līce, derived from -līko- (see -LY [1]) with an adverb-forming suffix -ō, repr. the ending of the abl. fem. (pre-Teut. -ād) or neut. (pre-Teut. -ōd); or, according to others, that of the instrumental neut. (pre-Teut. -ōm).

In OTeut. an adv. with this suffix must have implied the existence of an adj. with the suffix corresponding to -LY [1]. In OE., however, there are instances (e.g. bealdlīce boldly, swētlice sweetly) in which an adv. has been formed from a simple adj. without the intervention of an adj. in -līc, and this became the regular mode of forming an adv. of manner. Down to the 17th c., -ly was frequently attached even to adjs. in -ly, as godlily, kindlily, lowlily, statelily; but these formations are now generally avoided by recourse to some periphrastic form of expression. In daily, hourly, etc., the adj. and the adv. are identical in form. Partly and purposely are examples of an adv. f. sb. + -ly [2] with no related adj. Advs. in -ly were in several cases app. formed in ME. in imitation of OF. adverbs in -ment, before the corresponding adjective existed in English. Since the 16th c. the suffix has been added to ordinal numerals to form advs. denoting serial position, as firstly, secondly, etc., after F. premièrement, etc.

When -ly is attached to a disyllabic or polysyllabic adj. in -le, the word is contracted, as ably, simply, etc.; monosyllables in -le retain the e in writing, as solely; wholly is peculiar. Adjs. of more than one syll. ending in y change y to i bef. -ly, as merrily; in formations from monosyllabic adjs. the usage varies, e.g. slily, slyly. In duly, truly, the e is dropped. Adjs. in -ic nearly always form advs. in -ICALLY.

Meta- (me·tă), prefix, bef. a vowel normally met- (also bef. h, the resulting meth- being pronounced meþ), repr. Its chief senses are: sharing, action in common; pursuit or quest; and esp. change (of place, order, condition, or nature), corresp. to L. trans-. Occas. it has the sense 'after' or 'behind', as in metaphrenon (see 3 below).

1. In supposed analogy to METAPHYSICS (misapprehended as meaning 'the science of that which transcends the physical'), meta- has been prefixed to the name of a science, to form a designation for a higher science of the same nature but dealing with ulterior problems. Examples are Metabiolo·gical a., Metache·mistry, Metalo·gic, Metalo·gical a., Metamathema·tics, Metapheno·menal a., Metaphysio·logy.

2. Path. Used to form adjs. applicable to diseases or symptoms, with the sense 'arising subsequently to'; e.g. Meta-arthri·tic, following on gout, Metapneumo·nic; etc.

More systematically, meta- is used to distinguish one class of acids and their corresponding salts from another class (the ORTHO- acids) consisting of the same elements in different proportions, the meta- acids containing one, two, or three molecules of water less than the ortho- acids: as metantimonic, metapectic, metaphosphoric, metasilicic, metatitanic acids.

b. In the names of isomeric benzene di-derivatives, meta- denotes those compounds in which the two radicals that replace hydrogen in the benzene-ring are regarded as attached to alternate carbon atoms. The number of these is unlimited.

Mis- (mis), prefix[1], repr. OE. mis- :—OTeut. misso-* (whence missjan* MISS v.). The adj. misso-* had app. two senses: (1) divergent, astray, (2) mutual, alternate.

The hyphen is now employed chiefly in new or rarely used formations, and in words like mis-say, mis-cite, etc.

The predominant meaning of the prefix is that of 'amiss', 'wrong(ly)', 'bad(ly)', 'improper(ly)', 'mistaken(ly)'.

In early ME. many new compounds were made, some of which appear to have been suggested by French formations with mes- (see MIS-[2]); a word like misjudge has prob. a double origin, being partly of native formation, and partly an adaptation of OF. mesjuger. The most prolific period for the formation of mis- compounds was the 17th c., when writers such as Bacon, Donne, and Bp. Hall employed them largely.

In OE. mis- was prefixed to vbs., active and passive ppples., nouns of action and condition, and adjs. In ME. its composition with agent-nouns and adverbs followed as a matter of course.

1. Prefixed to verbs, with the meaning 'amiss', 'badly', 'wrongly', 'perversely', 'mistakenly'; as †misact, MISDO, MISLEAD, MISLIKE, etc. b. In the 14th-16th c., in some words, as MISDEEM, etc., mis- took the force of 'unfavourably', and in MISBODE, MISDOUBT, etc., it intensified the notion of uneasy feeding contained in the vb. These new senses and combs., however, are now arch. or dial.

2. Prefixed to ppples. and ppl. adjs with the same meaning as in 1; as misbound, miscuit.

3. Similarly prefixed to vbl. sbs., as misaccenting.

4. Prefixed to nouns of action, condition, and quality with the meaning 'bad', 'wrong', 'erroneous', 'perverse', 'mi-directed'; as misaccentuation, misappraisement, misattribution, misproposal.

5. Prefixed to agent-nouns; as misprofessor.

6. Prefixed to adjs. with the sense of 'wrongly', 'erroneously', 'perversely'; as misconceived.

7. Expressing negation (of something good or desirable); = DIS-, IN-, or UN-; as misadvertence.

8. Prefixed to words denoting something wrong or bad, serving as an intensive; as misdemeriting.

9. Mis- was often substituted for dis- (and even des-); hence the dial. misdain (after disdain), misery for descry.

Mis- (mis), prefix [2], in compounds adopted from French represents OF. mes- (mod.F. mes-, mes-, mé-) :—Com. Rom. minus-, with the sense 'bad(ly)', 'wrong(ly)', 'amiss', and with neg. force, in comb. with verbs, adjs., and nouns. Examples are MISADVENTURE, MISCHANCE, MISCHIEF, MISCREANT, etc.

-most (mōust, mŏst, məst), suffix, forming adjs. in the superl. degree, is an altered form of OE. -mest, a combination of two distinct OTeut. superl. suffixes, -mo- and -isto- -EST. The OE. superlatives in -mest descended from OTeut., except midmest MIDMOST, are formed not on adjs. but on prepositional or demonstrative stems; e.g. æftemest (see AFTERMOST), formest or fyrmest FOREMOST, inmest INMOST, ūtmest or ȳtmest UTMOST, etc. On the analogy of these older words, -mest was in OE. used to form the superlatives of several adjs. of local and temporal meaning, as lætmest, æastmest, etc. In late OE. the adjs. in -mest were regarded as compounds of mæst MOST, and were often spelt -mæst. In the 15th and 16th c. the suffix -most (taken as = MOST a.) was added to many comparatives in -er, as in furthermost, hindermost, etc. In subsequent formations, with the single exception of bettermost, the application of the suffix has been restricted to words denoting position in place, time, or serial order, as in OE.
